

March 20, 1918

When the revolution in Russia so significantly weakened the country in such way that they could not guard their own interests and much less be on the offensive towards other powers, it naturally came as a relief to Sweden. It meant that Sweden definitely could take a more neutral stand. Who could guess that another threat would come, this time from Germany, which lately has expressed some bitter words against Sweden. The German newspapers states that Sweden has been too friendly to the Entente. Nothing looks like Germany will try to enter Sweden, but it indicates that they have plans to set foot in Finland and without a doubt Åland to secure unlimited power over the Baltic Sea. These actions show that the sooner Germany gets defeated the better it will be for so many other countries that we may just call them the civilized world.