

August 7, 1918

Our country's president recently issued a proclamation or a document to "My country men," as he expresses himself, in which he seriously warns for the kind of mob rule that has started to appear. Each level-headed and sober patriotic citizen is welcoming these serious words of warning from the president. This mob society has been expressed by individuals who have claimed to particularly patriotic and who have claimed to have the right, without law, to mistreat other individuals, which have expressed disloyal thoughts or only have been suspected to have done so. He mentions them with the correct term: "traitors of the United States." During these anxious times we find many so called patriots as wolves in sheep's clothing. If a citizen or another person is guilty of perfidy against his own country the president's opinion is that that individual should be treated according to law. We hope to be able to publish the proclamation later.
